On the Contrary, It Is Usually a Wicked Waste of Time.

Those suffragists who pride themselves on their homemade preserves and doughnuts had better look to their laurels, after all. Maybe it isn't such a virtue to be a good cook. Maybe it is a waste of time. That is the disquieting thought that Martha Bensley Bruère suggests in her article on "The New Homemaking" in the current Outlook" (which is not noted for its advanced views on the woman question).

"There is no use getting sentimental," she warns the dear domestic women who she argues, "we cannot escape personal responsibility toward those who serve us. 'rush season by ladies' cloaks' on the East Side, the mill operatives in France who starve when we choose to reduce the amount of cloth in our gowns by half are all our domestic servants once removed. The time is not past by any means when it is a personal reproach to the housewife to serve her family unwholesome bread, to let her wash be badly done, to wear shoddy clothes or starve the people who work for sign of inefficiency, and we cannot escape responsibility for them because our servants do their work away from our immediste oversight. We can't bring the prodiregulate the woollen mill?

"When I was in college," she concludes. "we had a song, in which the hero asked

Can you brew, can you bake Good bread and cake? Before my love I utter. Can you sew a seam? Can you churn the cream And bring in the golden butter? What use is refraction? Chemical reaction, biologic protoplasm, Psychologic microcosm?

Would you be my weal,-You must cook the meal,-

You shake your head,— You I'll not wed,— And so, Farewell!

"If that song were rewritten and brought up to date the lover's questions would be much harder to answer, and yet they might not be so disconcerting. They would run something like this:
